however impossible it seems, by using
THE “RENODEN” BOOK COVER

This consists of two slip-on covers made of stout Manilla, which slide over the back and front cover of the book and are fastened to one another by long gummed tabs—thus allowing the title to be seen on the back.

Here are some of the advantages of the cover:—

1. The books are kept clean, and their life preserved.
2. Books of different classes can be easily distinguished by using different coloured covers.
3. In case of contagious illness in a class all the covers can be easily changed—thus reducing the chance of infection.
4. The cost of the cover is negligible compared to the extra life it gives to the book.

These are supplied through any stationer or printer at prices ranging from 1d. each.

SCHOOLS OF ENGLAND.

IF it be true that "the child is father of the man," England owes much to her schools. No country in the world has institutions comparable to the great Public Schools of Great Britain. Originally semi-monastic institutions, for the early education of the Clergy, they have, in the past two hundred years, supplied every branch of the public service with notable leaders: judges and statesmen, generals and diplomatists, pioneers of commerce and heroes of adventure.

These great foundations were originally six: Winchester College (founded 1387), Eton College (1440), Shrewsbury School (founded 1551), Westminster (re-founded 1560), Rugby School (1567), and Harrow School (1571), but the movement in secondary education, which took place in the "sixties," has elevated to Public School rank many old schools and some new ones whose traditions are of the highest, and who have proved themselves worthy compeers of their famous prototypes.

Schools there are now in plenty, providing sound teaching at fees which, in many cases, are far below the cost price of the education afforded: admirably equipped for the most part; efficiently staffed and served by a devoted body of scholars and gentlemen, to whose self-sacrificing labours, in and out of school, the conspicuous success of the English Public School system is due.

And yet few parents know what opportunities are within their children's reach; they are often content to let education run on in a haphazard way until it is time for their children to leave school, and then only do they discover that the child's future might have been far different if they had taken thought a year or two earlier in his career.

There never was a time in the history of English education when the "educational ladder" had more rungs than it has at present. Accidents of birth or wealth offer no insuperable barrier to the diligent possessors of brains, however exalted their ambitions.

"Foreigners often ask me," said George Canning at an Eton dinner, "by what means an uninterrupted succession of men, qualified, more or less eminently, for the performance of Parliamentary and official duties, is secured."

"First, I answer (without the prejudice, perhaps, of Eton and Oxford), that we owe it to our system of Public Schools and Universities. From these institutions is derived (in the language of the prayer of our Collegiate Churches) a due supply of men fitted to serve their country in Church and State."

To most Englishmen this statement is of the nature of a self-evident proposition, but to some of our intelligent Continental critics, and to certain home critics of the "Little Englander" type, several objections to the present system present themselves.

We are told that our Public Schools turn out men all of the same pattern, that individuality can find no outlet for its energies; or, again, that our schools teach nothing at all of any commercial value. Nothing could be less true than hasty generalization of this kind.

It is to the happy combination of freedom and discipline that we owe the high ideals and lofty character of the best of our public school men.

Tradition and environment, and the close association of masters and boys, seem to produce, almost automatically, a standard of conduct to which any form of meanness is abhorrent. The boy, as he works his way up the school, gradually becomes master of himself: he learns in the playing fields to control his temper, and work for the good, not of himself, but of his cause.

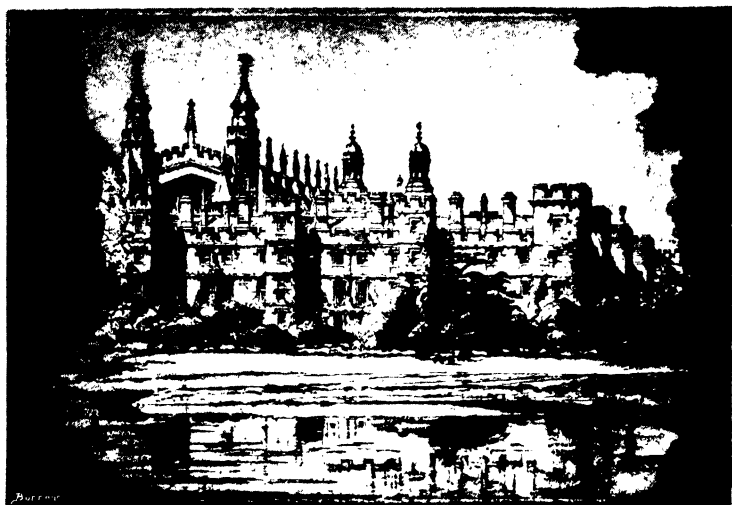

When he becomes, in his turn, a Prefect, he finds himself with a wider sphere of conscious influence than he will have possibly at any future time of his career, and if he has learnt his lesson he can leave an impression on the lives of his juniors that no time can efface.

No training of this character can be lightly dismissed as of inferior value, even commercially speaking.

It is only possible, within the limited space available here, to indicate briefly some of those distinctive characteristics and some of those outstanding personalities which have through the centuries helped to create "the Public School spirit." But the instances afforded by the few famous schools concerning which some notes are given in succeeding pages can be paralleled by many others provided by schools of more recent foundation or bearing less familiar names.

Of all our Public Schools, the pride of place belongs, naturally, to ETON (see p. 39). The School itself is a national possession. The man-in-the-street feels a sort of domestic, though uncomprehending, pride in reading of its "wet bobs" and "dry bobs," of "Pop," of "Six-penny," and of the gay doings on the 4th of June. A school of a thousand boys appeals to him as a living force, for, as Lord Rosebery has said, "every day at Eton is instinct with the future life of the nation."

"Nothing on the Globe's surface," writes Mr. Cotton Minchin, "can surpass in beauty the Castle, the Chapel, and the River on a lovely 4th of June. If it be pleaded that the Castle and the River form no part of the School, it may be answered that they are as much part of the School as the bloom is part of the peach. You can no more divorce Eton College from Windsor Castle than you can divorce Westminster School from Westminster Abbey."

In truth, the situation of the School is so delightful that it used to be the fashion to look upon it as a sort of Castle of Indolence; but since the repealing of the old statutes of Henry VI. in 1872, and the multitude of reforms that have followed in the wake of the new statutes, Eton has raised the level of her mathematics, science and modern languages to the high place originally occupied, in splendid isolation, by the classics. All young boys are introduced to science, and those who are disposed can specialize at about the age of fifteen.

Five Senior Wranglers have come from Eton: Sir John Herschel, Sir John Shaw-Lefevre, Rev. Norman MacLeod Ferrers, late Master of Caius College, and Lord Rayleigh, F.R.S., and this at a time when Mathematics were ignored. One must, therefore, conclude that Mathematics—like murder—will out.

Our wise ancestors chose to place their great educational establishments on the banks of rivers, preferring as a means of approach a good river to a bad road—but Harrow, like Rugby, is an exception. The one outstanding feature of HARROW is its Hill, and its pride and hero Lord Byron, who qualified for his famous swim from Sestos to Abydos by his early devotion to the old "Duck Puddle."

Byron is much more to Harrow than Shelley is to Eton. The former was a more orthodox schoolboy, full of animal spirits—tradition says that he kept a bear at Trinity—and he was a boy to the day of his death at Missolonghi. Shelley was unhappy at school: he refused to fag, and he never reached the Sixth Form, so that, from the point of view of his contemporaries, he could hardly have been a success, though, on the other hand, he was a "wet bob," and walked as a full corporal at Montem, 1808.

"Harrow," says Lord Byron to Captain Medwyn, "has been the nursery of almost all the politicians of the day"—our present Prime Minister, Mr. Baldwin, was educated at Harrow—and it has produced, and still produces, many famous soldiers (see p. 41).

OLD SCHOOL STEPS, HARROW.

"There is not a cleaner, a more healthy or a more comfortable spot in the King's dominions than the present COLLEGE OF WINCHESTER," writes Mr. Minchin. In the old days, when a scholar had eaten his meat off one side of his wooden platter, he would turn it over and eat his pudding off the other; but nowadays the old wooden platters are used only for breakfast and tea.

Winchester College, founded by William of Wykeham in 1387, has the oldest Chapel of any Public School, and shares with Eton its claim to the most beautiful.

It has, also, probably the most beautiful playing fields in the kingdom, on the banks of the Itchen, and given to the School by Dr. Riddings, a former Warden.

It has maintained from Elizabethan days its reputation for accurate scholarship and sound learning, and, in common with all other Public Schools, small and great, its "modern" subjects are as efficiently taught as the classical "founts of learning."

William of Wykeham, who was also the founder of New College, Oxford, did probably more for Public School education than any educationalist before or since.

In mediaeval times boys went to the Universities at about the same age as they now enter the great Public Schools. The result was that they dropped the study of classical authors of antiquity at fourteen, and sometimes even at twelve. Scholarship was sacrificed to philosophy. Horace retired in favour of Aristotle.

By fixing the leaving age of his foundationers at eighteen, or, if necessary, nineteen, William of Wykeham inaugurated a reform which has been copied by all Public Schools and which is the foundation of the Public School system. (see p. 58)

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL suggests at once the name of Dr. Busby, whose muscular development must have been at least as noticeable as his intellectual powers.

"Dr. Busby! A great man! He whipped my grandfather: a very great man! I should have gone to him myself if I had not been a blockhead: a very great man!"

This is Sir Roger de Coverley's comment on the Busby monument in Westminster Abbey, and successive generations have celebrated his praise. Busby's bust, his chair, and the table in which he kept his rods, stand at the head of "School," and in the small Busby library, which he built, are still to be seen the actual books he used. Cowper, who was for eight years at Westminster, "excelled at cricket and football," and became, to use his own words, "an adept in the infernal art of lying," although this is naturally not an integral part of the curriculum.

Cowley, Dryden, Gibbon, Warren Hastings, George Herbert, Ben Jonson, Locke, Prior, Southey, Charles Wesley and Wren were also O.W.'s.

The School itself differs in many respects from its compeers as regards situation.

It is hard to tell where the Abbey begins and where the School ends. In a vaulted cloister we come upon a modest door—labelled "Gymnasium." In a courtyard open to all passers-by, we find Fives Courts and Squash Racquets Courts. The School, indeed, seems to be one part School, one part

Abbey, and one part London Town. It has a roll of distinguished sons that will challenge comparison with any school in England. (see p. 48)

SHREWSBURY SCHOOL, founded in 1551, under the auspices of Edward VI, and enlarged in Queen Elizabeth's reign, now occupies handsome buildings overlooking the Severn and Shrewsbury's beautiful park, the Quarry. This is one of the few great schools still noted for classical scholarship, ranking in this respect with Winchester, Westminster, Eton, and St. Paul's. Under its famous Head Masters,

Samuel Butler (1798-1836) and Benjamin Hall Kennedy (1836-66), Shrewsbury "swept the board" at Oxford and Cambridge. Its roll of alumni includes Sir Philip Sidney, Fulke Greville, Charles Darwin, and Archbishop Thomson. The presence of the Severn gives Shrewsbury a place among the rowing Schools. Numerous close exhibitions to the two older Universities are available for Salopians, including some to Christ Church, Oxford, and Trinity College, Cambridge. (see p. 55)

RUGBY SCHOOL was founded in 1567 by Lawrence Sheriffe, a native of the town who became a citizen of London and merchant grocer to Queen Elizabeth. The School had an endowment in the Metropolis which rose in value during the eighteenth century from £116 to £5,000 a year.

The School made its greatest stride forward and became one of the most famous of English Public Schools during the head mastership of Thomas Arnold, D.D., whose rule commenced in 1828. It was not simply a question of material advance in numbers of scholars; Dr. Arnold set little store by that, though it came as a consequence of his leadership. "It is not necessary," he once said, "that this should be a school of 300, or 100, or of 50 boys, but it is necessary that it should be a school of Christian gentlemen." The inspiring moral force as well as the intellectual power of this great head master have left indelible marks upon Rugby. His equally famous son, Matthew Arnold, the distinguished poet and prose writer, whose critical essays hold so high a place in nineteenth-century literature, spent part of his schooldays at Rugby.

And how could a school be other than famous which has given to England one of her best national games?

CHARTERHOUSE has flourished greatly since its removal from its old site, and since the government of the Hospital was separated from that of the School. The group of buildings is perhaps stately rather than beautiful, but its situation is magnificent. Charterhouse is known to the public as much for its footballers as for its scholars, and it shares with Harrow the proud distinction of having won the Ashburton Shield nine times, although the Rifle Corps at Charterhouse dates only from its removal to the country.

General Sir Robert Baden-Powell shot for Charterhouse at Wimbledon in 1874, 1875 and 1876, and was the sole representative of Charterhouse in Mafeking. (See p. 36).

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL was the nursery of John Milton and of John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, whose names are inscribed in letters of gold on the Honour Boards of the School. Judge Jeffreys, of bloody memory, was also a Pauline. The old school of Dean Colet was destroyed in the Great Fire, and nothing survives of the earlier building but the bust of the founder, in the Governors' Room. There is no School Chapel in the fine new buildings, nor has there ever been one. Religious instruction is given throughout the School in accordance with the doctrine of the Church of England, but exemption is given to all whose parents desire it.

The extraordinary progress of St. Paul's under the rule of Dr. Walker is well known, and need be but briefly referred to here; the School has produced a multitude of scholars. (See p. 47).

MERCHANT TAYLORS' differs from the Schools already mentioned in its constitution. The School is not divided into Scholars and Commoners, and there is no endowment, and no boarding system is recognized by the School, although boarders are received by some of the assistant masters. Edmund Spenser, the author of the Faerie Queene, appropriately heads the list of Merchant Taylors' scholars. Lancelot Andrews, Bishop of Winchester, and the author of the Devotions, was also educated here, as was Juxon, the last Englishman to hold at the same time the offices of Bishop of London and Lord High Treasurer. He hunted a pack of hounds, and "was a person of great parts and temper, and had as much command of himself as of his hounds."

The greatest man of action that ever left Merchant Taylors' was Robert Clive. That he was also an orator we have the testimony of Chatham, who describes one of Clive's speeches in the House of Commons as the most eloquent he had ever heard.

In 1867 the Company transferred the School from Suffolk Lane to the former site of the Charterhouse, which had gone further afield to Godalming, and in its new quarters the School provides for 500 boys. (See p. 46).

Naval and Military.

ALL officers for the Executive and Engineer branches of the Royal Navy, or for the Royal Marines, will enter the Service, in future, as Naval Cadets, under identical conditions, between the ages of twelve and thirteen, and will be educated and trained together until passing as Sub-Lieutenants at the age of nineteen—twenty.

After a preliminary training at Osborne, candidates pass on to the Royal Naval College at Dartmouth to complete their training. The founding of these two Colleges has entirely altered the conditions of training for Naval Officers. The Colleges themselves are situated in most beautiful country, and the life, to judge from the enthusiasm of the cadets, is most interesting. The keenness of the Navy men is proverbial, and any want of keenness in the cadets is visited by official displeasure, which may take the form of a request for withdrawal. Applications for nominations should be addressed to the Assistant Private Secretary of the First Lord, after the candidate has reached twelve years of age.

For the Army Entrance Examinations, candidates must qualify before the maximum limit of nineteen and a half years is reached. The Advisory Board are of opinion that it is most desirable that the qualifying list should be applied as far as possible, not by a special examination, but by some substitute in the shape of a Leaving Certificate, in order to show that the candidates have obtained a fair standard of general education before entering for the competitive examination for admission to the Royal Military Academy or the Royal Military College.

Public Schools for Girls.

ONE of the most remarkable developments in modern education has been the foundation of Public Schools for Girls on precisely the same lines as the Public Schools for Boys. In these Schools the monitorial system, which is traditional in boys' schools, has been introduced, and great attention is given to physical development and domestic economy. In Early Victorian days the education of boys and girls was in water-tight compartments, and speaking broadly, anything that was not to be rated as an "accomplishment" was stigmatized as "unwomanly." We are told by some severe critics that our education of girls has lost its "atmosphere." For this we may be thankful. If we add up our gains and losses we shall find that our girls of to-day are distinctly healthier, more independent, and more capable of helping themselves out of a difficulty, than their forbears of fifty years ago.

We have now in our girls' schools a very strong esprit de corps. Most of the larger ladies' schools have flourishing Old Girls' Associations, and the range of teaching in all subjects is much the same as in boys' schools. There is among girls a greater conscientiousness: there is, therefore, a greater liability to over-work—consequently, we find that in many girls' schools the hours of study are confined to the morning, from 9 to 1, the afternoon being devoted to preparation, music, drawing, and calisthenics.

The pioneer in this good work (leaving the Ladies' College, Cheltenham, out of the question) was the Girls' Public Day School Trust, founded in 1872, its promoters being Mr. William Grey, the Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley, Miss Gurney, Sir J. P. Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., and others. It has now twenty-five flourishing High Schools, educating about 9,300 pupils, with over 700 Staff Mistresses.

The Church Schools' Company Ltd. was formed in July, 1883, to provide a sound general education for children of the middle classes, including religious instruction in accordance with the principles of the Church of England.

They have, however, a conscience clause in all their school schemes.

This Company now maintains seven schools in different parts of England, and educates about 1,500 girls.

The Church Education Corporation maintains four schools, and educates upwards of 530 girls.

There are also many Public Schools for Girls. The Harpur Trust, at Bedford, educates in the Modern School about 495 girls.

Of schools founded by the great London Companies, we have the Haberdashers' Aske's Acton School, accommodating upwards of 576 girls; the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham School; the Coborn School, formerly the Coopers' Company's School, accommodating 350; while the Mercers' Company are trustees of St. Paul's School for Girls, which is on the foundation originally provided by Dean Colet, in 1509, and which educates upwards of 474 girls.

Of Schools intended primarily for the Daughters of the Clergy, the following should be mentioned:—

St. Mary's Hall, Brighton (165), as coming within the scope of the present volume; while Milton Mount College, Crawley (formerly Gravesend) (150), was founded for the education of the Daughters of Congregational Ministers, although daughters of laymen are also admitted.

The Church of England High Schools in Upper Baker Street and Graham Street, founded by the late Caron Holland, offer education of the highest class, at fees slightly above the average; and other great London schools are the Frances Mary Buss Schools, viz. the North London Collegiate Day School, founded 1850, which has now accommodation for 450 girls, and the Camden School, founded in 1871. Both of these Schools are governed by schemes under the Endowed Schools Act.

Private Schools for Boys and Girls.

ENGLISH education owes a good deal to the many Private Schools scattered up and down the country. Private Schools are less circumscribed in regard to their curriculum than Public Schools: the classes are usually smaller, and eccentric or backward children have probably more attention paid to their idiosyncracies. The standard of efficiency in Private Schools has risen considerably within the last ten or fifteen years, and for this the Private Schools' Association is primarily responsible. This Association does everything in its power to represent the interests of efficient Private Schools, and it is recognized by the Board of Education for the purpose of consultation and the discussion of matters relating generally to Private Schools.

Of late years many Private Schools, on the general recommendation of the Association, have offered themselves voluntarily for inspection by the Board of Education, and, where such recognized Private Schools exist, educational authorities have shown a disposition to avail themselves of the education thus offered rather than establish Public Schools, which might compete on unequal terms with the secondary education already provided.

In this way the action of both the Board of Education and the Local Authority tends to produce a higher standard of efficiency in schools maintained by private effort, and it will become, by the progressive force of public opinion, increasingly difficult for Private Schools that wish to be classed as efficient to refrain from offering their school for inspection by the Board.

Care should be taken in selecting a Private School to see:

- (1) That the qualifications of the teachers (degrees, diplomas, etc.) are adequate.
- (2) That the number and variety of teachers are sufficient for the number of pupils.
- (3) That the premises, apparatus for teaching, playing fields, etc., are suitable
- (4) And, chiefly, that the education offered is sound.

Private Schools for girls often give a very thorough training in Music, and the value of such instruction can be accurately gauged by results obtained in the examinations of the Royal Academy of Music, the Royal College of Music, the London College of Music, Trinity College, and the Guildhall Schools of Music.

It is impossible to particularize, but one may say, generally speaking, that competition raises the level of efficiency, and that in the twenty or thirty English towns which are known as "educational centres," the level of Private School education is very high.

THE CHOICE OF A SCHOOL.

OF all the duties which a parent has to discharge there are perhaps none for which the average man comes less prepared than those connected with the education of his children. The parent's difficulty is aggravated by the fact that on this subject trustworthy information and advice cannot easily be obtained. For a boy who is physically ill, a specialist can be summoned at a moment's notice ; in any legal matter the services of a highly trained lawyer are usually available ; but when the subtle and complicated questions relating to a boy's mental growth have to be dealt with, the average parent is generally unable to obtain any expert guidance, and he is often forced to adopt the solutions which are nearest to hand.

It is evident that books containing trustworthy information relating to schools serve a valuable purpose as a guide to parents. In this article the writer has endeavoured to supplement the information which is presented in such admirable form in the book by a brief discussion of the considerations which a parent ought to have in mind in choosing a school for his child.

Day and Boarding Schools.

THESE schools may be divided roughly into two main classes—the day schools and the boarding schools—and in relation to these classes of schools parents fall naturally into three categories : those whose boys must go to a day school, those whose boys must go to a boarding school, and those who have to decide whether to send their boys to a day or a boarding school.

As to the first of these classes—parents whose boys must be sent to a day school—little need be said. Their problem is fairly simple. In many cases no question of choice arises, and, if a choice has to be made, local knowledge is usually a trustworthy guide. Moreover, the consequences of the choice are not so vital to the boy as in the case of choosing a boarding school—partly because the boy is always under the parents' supervision, and partly because the master of a day school does not undertake such important responsibilities in relation to the boy as the master of a boarding school.

The second class of parents—those who are obliged to send their boys to a boarding school—includes those resident in India or the Colonies who send their boys home for their education, those living in cheerless or unhealthy towns, or in the country far away from day schools. For three-quarters of the year, if not for the whole year, such parents must be relieved of nearly all their responsibilities to their children, and they must find a school where their boys can be educated, clothed, fed, and maintained in good physical and moral health. The task of selecting a boarding school is, therefore, one of the most difficult matters with which a conscientious parent has to deal. In a number of cases, it is true, tradition dictates that a boy shall be sent to a certain school. But the reputation of a school is continually varying and circumstances may arise in which it would be rash to follow even a well-established family tradition.

The third class of parents consists of those who have to decide between a day school and a boarding school. In the ideal case, where the circumstances of the home are unexceptionable, where the boy can receive helpful supervision from his parents in his studies and personal difficulties, a great deal can no doubt be said in favour of day schools. Homes of this kind are, however, rare, and if the admitted advantages of home life carry with them debilitating influences, such as richness of food, distractions in the evening, and what Bagehot has called the "contentious tenderness" of the domestic circle, it is usually best for a boy of good health and spirits to be sent to a boarding school, even if some financial sacrifice on the part of the parents is entailed. In the case of a boy of susceptible character or of weak health, the decision may be more difficult, but it should be remembered that though a boy of this character may suffer irretrievable harm in the rough and tumble of a public school, there are many good private boarding schools adapted to his special needs.

Characteristics of the Great Public Schools.

OF the English boarding schools for boys, the most important are undoubtedly those which have been given the somewhat misleading title of "public schools." The external characteristics of these schools are few and definite. First, as explaining the title of the schools, there is the fact that the schools are nominally governed by a body whose members have no financial interest in the success or failure of the school, so that the schools are "public" institutions as contrasted with "private" institutions. The title of public school is not often given to schools with less than 200 or 300 boarders, who live in the school house or in the houses of assistant masters of the School. The ages of the boys are fairly evenly distributed between twelve to fourteen, the age of entrance, and eighteen or nineteen, the leaving age. The standard of living, and in consequence the school fees, must be fairly high. Lastly, the schools have close relations with the ancient Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. A reasonable proportion of the boys on leaving proceed directly to one or other of these Universities, and the masters, with some exceptions, are Oxford, Cambridge or London graduates. Partly in consequence of these relations, the schools pay great attention to the teaching of the classical languages, Latin and Greek. The question which may be asked—how many English schools at present satisfy these requirements?—is not easily answered. In 1861 a Royal Commission inquired into nine specified leading public schools, seven of which—Eton, Winchester, Westminster, Charterhouse, Harrow, Rugby, and Shrewsbury—were boarding schools, and two—St. Paul's and Merchant Taylors', in London—were day schools. By general consent, however, the number of public schools at the present time is several times greater, as there are many schools of comparatively recent foundation which have characteristics in all respects similar to those of the older schools.

The Influence of Public Schools.

THE external characteristics of the English public schools have been mentioned. It remains to speak of those more important characteristics which defy precise definition—their ideals of work and play, and the social and moral standards which they impress upon their alumni. In an article published in the Revue pour les Français, Baron Pierre de Coubertin, an acute and discerning Frenchman, who has become familiar with English life and manners from long residence in this country, ascribes the political stability of England to the public schools and the preparatory schools, which in his opinion are the true moulders of English political spirit. It is they, he says, which are in real touch with the country: it is they which have produced the characteristic English stability of ideas. Wherever the public school boy goes he carries with him and establishes, almost unconsciously, the social and moral code to which he has grown accustomed at his school. This code is a thing which descends unchanged from generation to generation. The gentleman is made by it. "I know no other definition of a gentleman than this—a gentleman is an Englishman made by the public schools."

If a boy at a public school does not make a large number of friends among his school-fellows he at any rate learns—and it is an important lesson—the character and modes of thought of those with whom he will have to deal in after life. He learns that cabinet ministers, judges and bishops were all in their embryo-stage "small and pomivorous animals," and he will refuse to be duped in after life by "red robes and furs, cassocks and square caps." And if his life is spent in the great world of business or the turmoil of manufacture, the cloistered seclusion of his school, rich in its memories of the founder's zeal and devotion and in its traditions of service to Church and State, must ever be to him an inspiration and delight.

Boarding Schools.

THE principal consideration affecting the choice of a boarding school may now be mentioned. The question of expense concerns most parents. It should be remembered that the quality of the education provided in a school is not directly proportional to the fees payable. The fact that some schools are richly endowed while others are poorly endowed would be sufficient to disturb any such simple proportionality. From the purely educational point of view, there may be little to choose between a school in which the fees amount to £150 per annum, and another in which the £70 per annum will cover all the expense. It should not be forgotten that extra expenses may amount to a considerable sum, depending on the character of the school, the amount of private tuition which boys usually have, the charges for special subjects, etc.

DISTANCE FROM HOME. In general it is not desirable that a boy should have to travel long distances at the beginning and end of each term. Most schools in consequence have certain territorial connections, and, other things being equal, a school easily accessible from a boy's home is to be preferred to one more remote.

SCHOLARSHIPS. If a boy has more than average ability the number and value of the entrance and leaving scholarships which a school offers is a consideration of great importance. The larger schools are generally richer in these scholarships, but many of the smaller schools have valuable leaving scholarships tenable at Oxford and Cambridge and elsewhere.

Particulars of these Scholarships will be found in the section devoted to Public Schools.

HEALTH. It would be difficult to over-estimate the importance of the health record of a school. The character of the soil, the altitude and aspect of the school must all be considered, as also must the amount and kind of athletics.

RELIGION. The opportunity of selecting a school whose religious teaching is in conformity with that of the parents is to-day comparatively easy. The chief religious influences are received through the chapel services or morning and evening prayers. Church of England schools of a broad type are perhaps in the majority, while for religious teaching of a more distinct type schools may be selected for High Church, Evangelical, Congregationalists, Christian Scientists, Quakers, Wesleyans, Roman Catholics, Moravians, Jews, etc.

THE CHARACTER OF THE EDUCATION is a matter on which expert evidence should be obtained. It must be considered, if possible, in relation to the profession which a boy is to follow. Thus, some schools make a special feature of preparing boys for the Army. If a good scientific education is desired, inquiries must go further than ascertaining the existence of a Modern side. A school may have a Modern side with lavishly equipped laboratories and yet the whole atmosphere of the school may be antagonistic to modern studies. Success in obtaining open scholarships at the Universities is a fairly good test of the quality of highest training provided by a school. The age and reputation of the Head Master and the qualifications of the staff should also be taken into account.

SIZE OF THE SCHOOL. For a boy of more than average abilities a large school is to be preferred to a small school. A boy of only moderate abilities will probably receive more attention in a smaller school. In a very large school the influence of the Head Master on the individual boy is, of course, very slight.

MORAL TONE. This is a matter in which parents are naturally most anxious, but it is exceedingly difficult to get trustworthy information in regard to it. Occasionally the moral tone of a whole school is affected ; but more frequently one or more of the boarding houses in a school gets an unfavourable reputation. On the whole, however, the chance of moral contagion is exceedingly light.

Girls' Schools.

WHAT has been said of boys' schools applies also to girls' schools. The old tradition that the education of girls should be chiefly concerned with what are known as the accomplishments—music, drawing, dancing, and deportment—is now almost extinct. It is difficult to believe that the revolution which has been effected in girls' education is of such recent date. The Royal Commission of 1865 reported on girls' schools in terms of strong condemnation, such as undue time given to accomplishments, and those not taught intelligently or in any scientific manner, etc. Much of the credit of this revolution is due to the personal efforts of the late Miss Beale, of Cheltenham Ladies' College, and Miss Buss, of the North London Collegiate School, and to the work of the Girls' Public Day School Trust and other companies which have established well-equipped and efficient day schools for girls in all parts of the country. The standard type of English education for girls is that provided by day schools—generally called high schools—in which the afternoons are left free for exercise and recreation. There are, however, a number of boarding schools, some of which in respect of size and character can challenge comparison with the principal public schools for boys; and the parent is offered a wide choice of smaller schools of more home-like character. In general it may be said that the educational efficiency in girls' schools is more uniform than in boys' schools; there is a greater alertness, a greater willingness to study new principles and methods of teaching, and a more serious attempt to achieve perfection in the teaching art than are generally found in boys' schools.

YOUR SCHOOL PROSPECTUS

plays a very important part in the life of the School. Many of the more progressive Schools have realized that the costs involved in producing a dignified and refined Prospectus represent investment rather than expenditure.

For many years we have specialized in the designing and printing of Prospectuses which compel attention and secure pupils. It has always been our aim to study the Parents' point of view and to design the Prospectus in such a way that it shall adequately set forth the claims of the School and attract the Parent.

This edition of The Schools of England you are now perusing was produced and printed entirely at our Works, and we are continually receiving from Heads of Schools letters of thanks and appreciation for School Prospectuses and other School printing we have produced for them.

PROSPECTUS

plays a very important part in the life of the School. Many of the more progressive Schools have realized that the costs involved in producing a dignified and refined Prospectus represent investment rather than expenditure.

For many years we have specialized in the designing and printing of Prospectuses which compel attention and secure pupils. It has always been our aim to study the Parents' point of view and to design the Prospectus in such a way that it shall adequately set forth the claims of the School and attract the Parent.

This edition of The Schools of England you are now perusing was produced and printed entirely at our Works, and we are continually receiving from Heads of Schools letters of thanks and appreciation for School Prospectuses and other School printing we have produced for them. The

although of necessity a less expensive publication needs to bear the stamp of dignity and refinement. We have always maintained that printed matter to be good need not necessarily be expensive. If the type is properly set and the right materials used, quite an inexpensive publication can be made to look well. Our skill and long experience in this direction is entirely at your disposal, and we suggest that you fill in one of the forms facing page 484 and let us give you a quotation entirely without cost or obligation.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

COMMERCIAL SECTION FOR GIRLS AND BOYS.

Principal :

MISS D. W. COURBET, P.C.T., F.C.T.S. (Inc.), who has had wide experience in coaching for Examinations, and secured 100 per cent. successes during two successive years.

FOR some time past there has been a great need in this district for a School which will not only give a sound and liberal secondary education, but also prepare students for professional and commercial careers. Every year there are many promising students who cannot enter King Edward's or the Secondary Schools owing to the lack of vacancies. There are, also, many parents who prefer to send their girls to a school where the Syllabus is not too crowded, and where adequate time is given to sport.

These are the main reasons for the foundation of Soho College, an institution employing the most modern educational methods, and comprising a High School for Girls and a Commercial Section.

The School gives a thorough education in all essential subjects, and also prepares girls for public examinations and entrance examinations to King Edward's and Secondary Schools.

Girls are accepted from the age of six years, and can continue their education right through the Commercial Section, so that on leaving the College they possess the specialized knowledge which is vital to success in a professional or commercial career.

COMMERCIAL SECTION.

Students accepted from the age of fourteen.

To the boy or girl who wishes to enter a professional or commercial career, the importance of possessing a specialized training cannot be exaggerated. Employers and Business Men to-day are insisting on proficiency, and the student who enters the Business World with a sound education enters with confidence, and with every prospect of a successful career.

A Saturday Morning Class is held to prepare Boys and Girls for King Edward's High School examinations.

Special Evening Classes for children and adults.

MISS COURBET will be pleased to interview parents or intending students by appointment, or answer any enquiries by letter.

THE School is a large well-built modern house, standing in its own grounds on the highest part of the Dyke Road and enjoying the air from the Downs and the sea.

The aim of the School is to provide an education as thorough as that of the best Public Girls' School, but without the social mixture and large classes which these necessarily entail. There are two large gardens for tennis and other games.

Natural History excursions take place every Friday afternoon in Summer.

As there are no examinations in the Spring Term, more time is given then to the organizations of the School and its social activities. These include concerts, Girl Guide meetings, debates and dances, conducted by the girls themselves. The School Magazine is also run by pupils. Music and French are particularly well taught. COPPLESTONE HOUSE, BUDLEIGH SALTERTON.

Head Mistress : MISS A. B. F. BRACKENBURY.

MISS A. B. F. BRACKENBURY receives children under fourteen in her Preparatory School at Budleigh Salterton. The house is bright and airy ; facing south and west, it stands high, and is within a few minutes' walk of the country and sea. The climate is warm, yet bracing, and consequently ideal for children.

The Head Mistress is assisted by a Staff of trained and experienced teachers. The aim of the School is to provide a thoroughly good education for Girls up to fourteen years of age, and to prepare them for Entrance and Scholarships at the leading Public Schools or large Private Schools.

MISS BRACKENBURY has had many years' experience with children of all ages, and feels sure that the system of educating small girls in the same school as those several years older has many disadvantages, while it is also apparent that girls who have had no school education before entering a large boarding school are seriously handicapped.

The School Life is organized upon simple lines, in every way allowing full scope for the natural and individual development of the children, while at the same time teaching them the happiness of a disciplined life, and the necessity of an unselfish outlook and a community spirit.

Games are keenly taught ; a great deal of attention is paid to the coaching of Tennis and teaching of Dancing, in order that the children may be something more than beginners at their Public School.

Rest and Sleep. The children are taught to work hard during lesson-hours, but there is no over-pressure. No work is done before breakfast, or after 6.30 p.m. The children rest in their own rooms after the mid-day meal. The youngest ones go up to bed soon after 6.30 p.m., the others at intervals according to age and position in the School, the oldest going at 8 p.m.

ASTON-LE-WALLS HOUSE,

BYFIELD, NORTHANTS.

THE School is conducted by a Priest assisted by a trained certificated lay staff. The ruling principle is to prepare boys for public and competitive examinations for whatever career they may eventually take up. The objection that one not infrequently hears to the average public school education is : that it does not go far enough, that it is too exclusive, that it has taught a boy very little that is going to help him to earn his living in business or commerce.

Doubtless, there is an element of truth in this ; the Head of the Firm, to whom the candidate has to present himself in quest of employment, can hardly be expected to offer a munificent salary in return for a detailed knowledge of the classics, nor can he pay very highly for the candidate's facility for grappling with Mathematical Concepts.

In attempting to blend the Classical and Mathematical with the Modern and Commercial side many difficulties had to be faced ; however, these were not insuperable, and now every boy from the beginning does a complete course in both branches.

For some years the School has been a centre for the Oxford School Certificate examination (Senior and Junior) and now is also a centre for the London Chamber of Commerce and the Royal Society of Arts Examinations.

There are facilities for all the usual school games ; the records set up for some of the events at the annual athletic sports compare favourably with some of those of the Public Schools. There is a school orchestra and an excellent boys' library.

PROSPECTUS

plays a very important part in the life of the School. Many of the more progressive Schools have realized that the costs involved in producing a dignified and refined Prospectus represent investment rather than expenditure.

For many years we have specialized in the designing and printing of Prospectuses which compel attention and secure pupils. It has always been our aim to study the Parents' point of view, and to design the Prospectus in such a way that it shall adequately set forth the claims of the School and attract the Parent.

This edition of The Schools of England you are now perusing was produced and printed entirely at our Works, and we are continually receiving from Heads of Schools letters of thanks and appreciation for School Prospectuses and other School printing we have produced for them. The

although of necessity a less expensive publication needs to bear the stamp of dignity and refinement. We have always maintained that printed matter to be good need not necessarily be expensive. If the type is properly set and the right materials used, quite an inexpensive publication can be made to look well. Our skill and long experience in this direction is entirely at your disposal, and we suggest that you fill in one of the forms facing page 484 and let us give you a quotation entirely without cost or obligation.

Your School

plays a very important part in the life of the School. Many of the more progressive Schools have realized that the costs involved in producing a dignified and refined Prospectus represent investment rather than expenditure.

For many years we have specialized in the designing and printing of Prospectuses which compel attention and secure pupils. It has always been our aim to study the Parents' point of view and to design the Prospectus in such a way that it shall adequately set forth the claims of the School and attract the Parent.

This edition of The Schools of England you are now perusing was produced and printed entirely at our Works, and we are continually receiving from Heads of Schools letters of thanks and appreciation for School Prospectuses and other School printing we have produced for them. The

although of necessity a less expensive publication needs to bear the stamp of dignity and refinement. We have always maintained that printed matter to be good need not necessarily be expensive. If the type is properly set and the right materials used, quite an inexpensive publication can be made to look well. RENDCOMB COLLEGE,

NEAR CIRENCESTER.

Head Master : J. H. SIMPSON, M.A.

(late Scholar of Pembroke College, Cambridge.)

RENDCOMB COLLEGE was founded and endowed in 1920 by the late Mr. F. N. H. Wills. It stands about 600 feet above sea level in one of the most interesting and attractive districts of the Cotswold country. The buildings, comprising the main structure and outbuildings of a large country house, contain dormitories, classrooms, a dining hall, recreation rooms, a laboratory, manual workshop and gymnasium. The house has central heating and is lighted by electricity. A new system of drainage was installed in 1920. There are good playing-fields, and the boys have access to the park of 450 acres which surrounds the College.

The College is open to boarders only, and no boy is admitted below the age of ten years. The aim is to provide a liberal education in the free and healthy conditions of country life. The Time-Table, while providing for the usual subjects included in secondary education, also contains certain periods for "Individual Work," in which a boy can study either a subject in which he is backward, or one in which his particular tastes incline him.

The College, while providing boys with a good general education, endeavours to fit them for the duties of citizenship by developing alike individual initiative and the spirit of social duty, and by teaching them the value of associated work, and the conditions under which it can be rendered successful. To a larger extent than at most schools the out of school life is ordered by the boys themselves.

Boys are prepared for University Scholarships, Higher Certificates, and other examinations.

The College was inspected in 1922 by the Board of Education, and has been placed upon their list of Efficient Secondary Schools.

The generous endowment of the College enables the annual fee of £100 to make further provision than is commonly covered by school fees.

For particulars of the Open and Gloucestershire Scholarships, and for the illustrated Prospectus, application should be made to the Head Master or Secretary.

PROSPECTUS

plays a very important part in the life of the School. Many of the more progressive Schools have realized that the costs involved in producing a dignified and refined Prospectus represent investment rather than expenditure.

For many years we have specialized in the designing and printing of Prospectuses which compel attention and secure pupils. It has always been our aim to study the Parents' point of view, and to design the Prospectus in such a way that it shall adequately set forth the claims of the School and attract the Parent.

This edition of The Schools of England you are now perusing was produced and printed entirely at our works, and we are continually receiving from Heads of Schools letters of thanks and appreciation for School Prospectuses and other School printing we have produced for them.

Situated in one of the most healthy and picturesque parts of Kent, Bradbourne College stands high on the outskirts of the town, in close proximity to Knole Park and enjoying bracing air.

The rooms are large, airy and healthy, and every possible arrangement has been made for the comfort of the children. The School has its own tennis courts, drill terrace and kitchen-garden.

The Principal attaches the utmost importance to the training of character, and the developing of such qualities as self-control, order and method, thoroughness and consideration for others, and with this view, Miss Tocher personally opens school each morning with a short address.

The health of the School has always been most satisfactory. No pupil is allowed to return to School after suffering from or being exposed to infectious illness without a medical certificate.

The musical work of the School is exceptionally thorough, special attention being paid to technical training, and examination results have always been excellent.

The Principal deprecates and avoids the system of cramming for examinations, and considers that public examinations should not be entered for too frequently, this leaving more time for the working out of original methods. Under this system examination results have been very satisfactory. Prospectus on application.

GIRLS.

Professor Buser's Alpine Girls' Institute,
TEUFEN, BEI ST. GALLEN, SWITZERLAND.

A first-class School, highly recommended. Remarkable success in Modern Languages and Music. Special Division for Girls under twelve years.

ECOLE NOUVELLE DE LA SUISSE ROMANDE.

Principal :

M. LOUIS VUILLEUMIER.

THIS is a Swiss School, situated at Chailly Lausanne, and founded by a group of parents, so that their children might be prepared for Examinations in Switzerland. There is a limited number of Boarders, whose mother-tongue is English.

Pupils of other than Swiss nationality who desire to enter the School must therefore expect to adapt themselves to surroundings quite different to their own, and to accept the School's customs and rules accordingly. They will have the advantage of associating with Swiss schoolfellows and of hearing French constantly spoken, for all lessons in class are given in French.

Special classes in French are arranged for such pupils, who begin with spending much of their time in these, and gradually re-join the regular classes as their progress in French enables them to do so with advantage. The stage when the change can be made in earnest is usually reached by the end of the second Term.

No lessons are given in English—apart, that is, from lessons taken in that language privately. Pupils who do not know French, and who do not remain more than a single year in the School, cannot follow the programme which they might have followed in their own countries. They will have gained the experience of a year spent abroad; they will have learnt French enough to help them throughout their school career, but if they wish to acquire a mastery of the language which will serve them for life they must remain two years at least. At the end of the first year, and during the second, they will be able to follow the regular curricula, and even to recover their ground in such subjects as may have been left in abeyance during the first year.

Many pupils have been prepared—either in the regular classes of the School, or in special private tuition given in English, either individually or in small groups—for the entrance examinations of English or American schools, or for the examinations of the College Entrance Board. The School organization is sufficiently flexible to allow many variations of programme.

Games of all kinds are played.

The ATCO

ALL BRITISH
MOTOR MOWER

As Economical as it is Perfect.

18,000 users (including leading public schools) are to-day preserving old turf, and perfecting new, quickly and economically with the ATCO Motor Mower—the best machine of its kind in existence. Consider: the ATCO cuts 1,000 square yards of turf in 20 minutes at a fuel cost of 1d.; it moves under its own power and requires only one operator. In some cases the economy of ATCO over a twelve-month actually repays the initial outlay.

The ATCO Service Organisation

A chain of ATCO Service Depots is maintained throughout the country, thereby ensuring for ATCO owners continuous service from their machines, and a quick "spares" service if required.

You can purchase now by Instalments.

For £8 cash you can have immediate delivery of a 14 inch ATCO Mower—larger sizes in proportion—and pay the balance over 12 months. In this way the machine can be made practically to "pay for itself" as you use it.

A New Invention in Wire Mattresses which puts "EE'S" into Sleep.

This invention is unique in its combination of economy, hygiene, strength, and simplicity, and it gives increased comfort over all other types.

It consists of closely coiled supersteel springs, interlaced in the fashion of the old straw mattress laths, and hooked into the frame. This gives a spring surface immeasurably stronger and more resilient than previous types, and having no loose segments is practically unbreakable. Should any one strand get damaged it can be slipped out and replaced in a moment.

Having been adopted as standard at numbers of the best Schools, Sanatoria, Workhouses, Asylums, and Infirmarys, it is gradually superseding old fashioned ones. We apply it equally well to iron and wood bedsteads, both single and double sizes.

We also make BETTER BEDDING, hair, wool, flock, and feathers, etc. An especial feature of ours is the remaking of bedding and the repairing of bedsteads. We have the most up-to-date plant for the cleansing and remaking of your existing bedding, these being returned quite equal to new ones.

If you send us your bedsteads to repair with "Wilsomnia" we are sure the result will please you.

Any further information will be promptly and pleasantly given.
